

So the FCC doesn't need to consult the public before making media consolidation easier for large corporations? Indeed, it isn't even necessary to make your plans public? It seems to me that you operate more for the benefit of those who make money off the media in this country than those who rely on that media for information. Do the people or do the people not own the airwaves? If we do, why are broadcasters not charged rent? They sure as heck wouldn't give us something for nothing.
